FELIX SPRUCES UP

Felix the Cat was sitting on the back porch of the little house in which he lived with the Brown family. Through the kitchen door, he could hear the voices of Mrs. Brown and a neighbor talking. He couldn't hear everything they said, but here and there he managed to catch a sentence or two.

The Browns were a nice family, Felix thought to himself. They treated him well and kept him supplied with plenty of nice fresh milk and good food. Felix felt that he would like to do something to show his appreciation of the good home that they were giving him.

Just then he heard Mrs. Brown say to her neighbor, "—and now I'll have to buy a pair of trees."

That's all Felix needed to hear.

"I know what she means," Felix said to himself. "She wants two trees, one on each side of the walk in front of the house."

Felix decided that there was no need for Mrs. Brown to buy trees when he knew where there were lots of them that could be had for the taking. He scurried into the garden tool shed and looked for a good stout spade.

Sure enough, leaning against some flower pots was exactly what Felix was looking for. He slung it over his shoulder and walked happily towards the woods.

In a near-by field, Perky the Pup stopped sniffing for a bone he had buried as he saw Felix passing along the road.

"Where are you going, Felix?" Perky asked.

"On a tree hunt," Felix answered smiling.

"A tree hunt?" repeated Perky the Pup, puzzled. "What do you mean?"

"I heard Mrs. Brown say she needed a couple of trees, and I'm going out to find them for her," Felix explained.

"Oh, I see," the pup answered. "Perhaps I can help you. I don't need a shovel to dig with. I do very well with my paws."

"I could use some help," Felix admitted, "because it isn't very easy digging up a tree, even a small one."

"All right then, let's go!" Perky said as he jumped over a low stone wall and joined Felix.

About fifteen minutes later, Felix the Cat and the little pup were walking along a narrow path at the edge of the woods.

"Keep your eyes open for two nice trees," Felix instructed.

"Okay, Felix," the pup answered, and then suddenly said, "how about those two over there?"

Perky was pointing to two tremendous cypress trees.

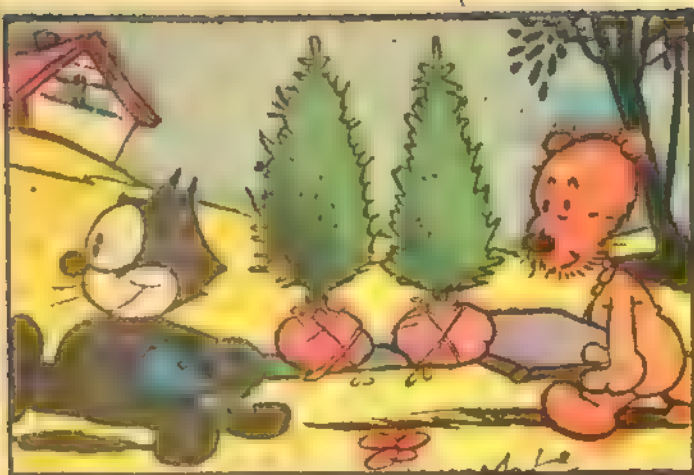

"Don't be silly," Felix laughed. "Even if we could move them, they would be much too big in front of Mrs. Brown's house."

They walked along the path some more, when the pup nudged Felix and pointed, "There's a dogwood tree," Perky said.

"How do you know it's a dogwood tree?" Felix asked.

"Because I'm a dog myself, and I can tell by its bark," Perky giggled.

"That's a pretty punk joke," Felix laughed, "but I'll be careful not to let you lead me into another one like it."

They walked deeper into the woods, and Perky stopped.

"There's a choice of trees, Felix. Cypress, birch, elm, locust, oak, pine and maple. Which will it be?"

"None of those would be right for what I want," Felix said as he looked them over. "They are all too big, and not the right kind for setting in front of a house."

"Well, Gosh!" Perky exclaimed, "what kind of a tree are you looking for?"

"I have to find two baby spruce trees," Felix answered.

"Oh, that's easy," Perky wuffed. "Just follow me. I know these woods like a book, and I know just where to find two small spruce trees, just the way you want them. They will be easy to dig up, too, because they are very small."

Perky went, bounding along the path, with Felix the Cat at his heels. Seconds later, Felix and his friend had stopped in a clearing and were looking at two nicely shaped trees.

"These are exactly what I want!" Felix exclaimed delightedly. "Let's start digging."

Felix plunged his spade into the moss-covered ground while Perky dug with his paws to loosen the earth around the trees.

"Be careful not to injure the roots!" Felix warned. "We have to leave enough earth around the trees to keep them alive until we replant them again."

A short while later, Felix and Perky had both trees carefully removed, and they were carrying them back to Mrs. Brown's house. It wasn't hard for them to do, because Felix thought of resting the trees on the spade. As each one took one end, they were able to carry the trees very well between them.

When they got home, Felix and Perky quickly dug two holes in front of the house on either side of the path, and set the trees in them. After patting the earth so that the trees would be firmly held, Felix rang the doorbell while Perky watched.

A moment later, Mrs. Brown came to the door.

"I have a surprise for you, Mrs. Brown," Felix said proudly, "Perky and I got your trees for you."

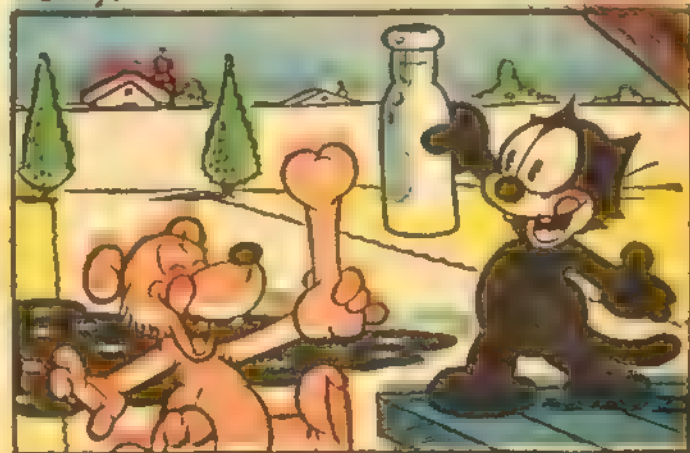

"They are very nice, and they look fine there, Felix, but I didn't want any trees," Mrs. Brown said, puzzled.

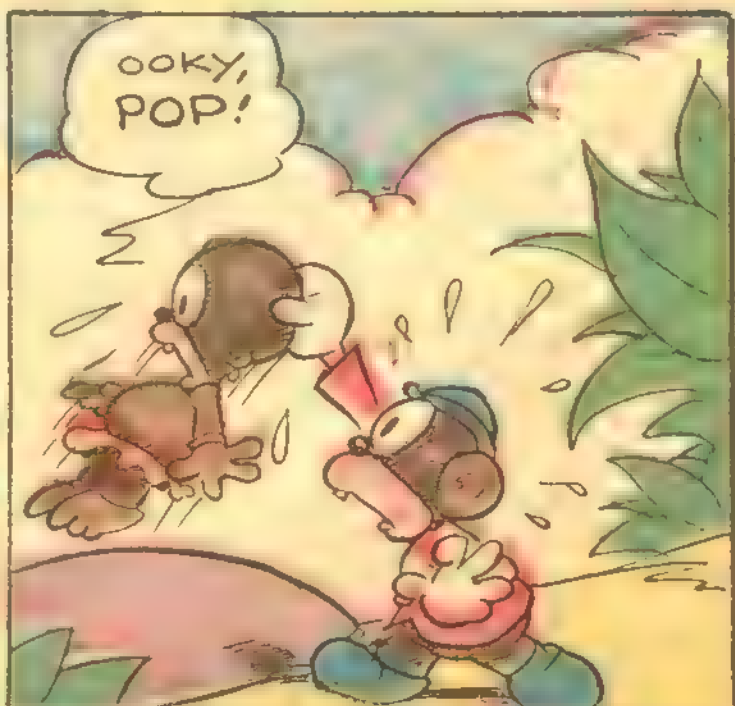

"Why, I heard you myself," Felix exclaimed. "This morning you told a neighbor that you needed to buy a couple of trees."

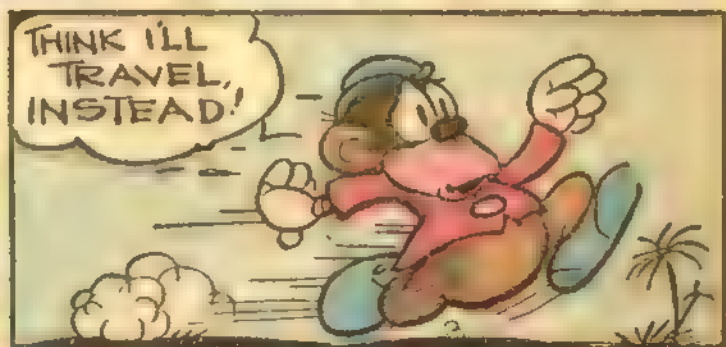

"Oh, that!" Mrs. Brown laughed, "I was talking about SHOE trees, Felix. You know, those things you put into shoes to keep them in shape, not regular trees."

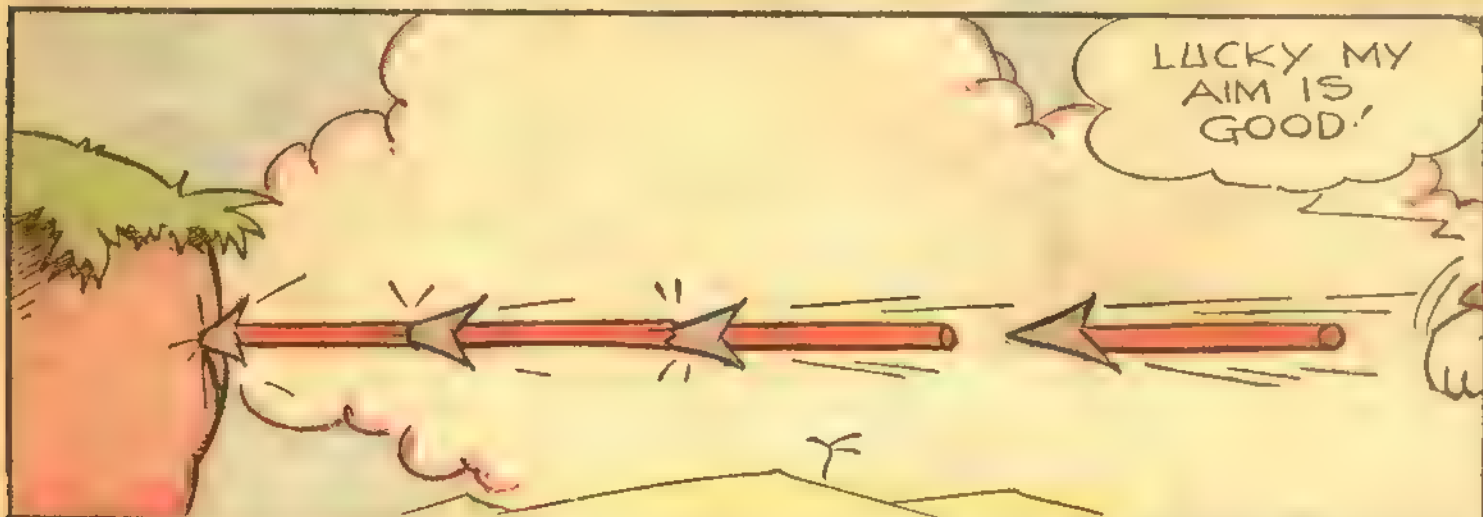

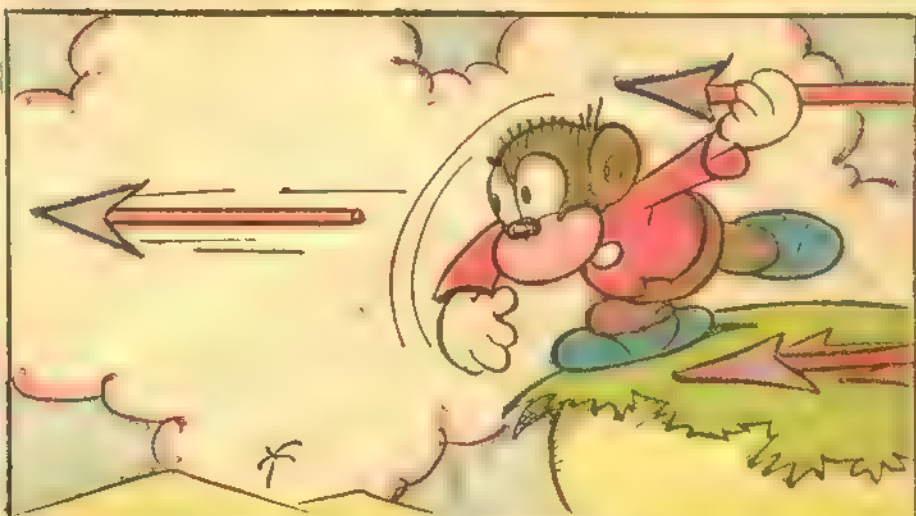

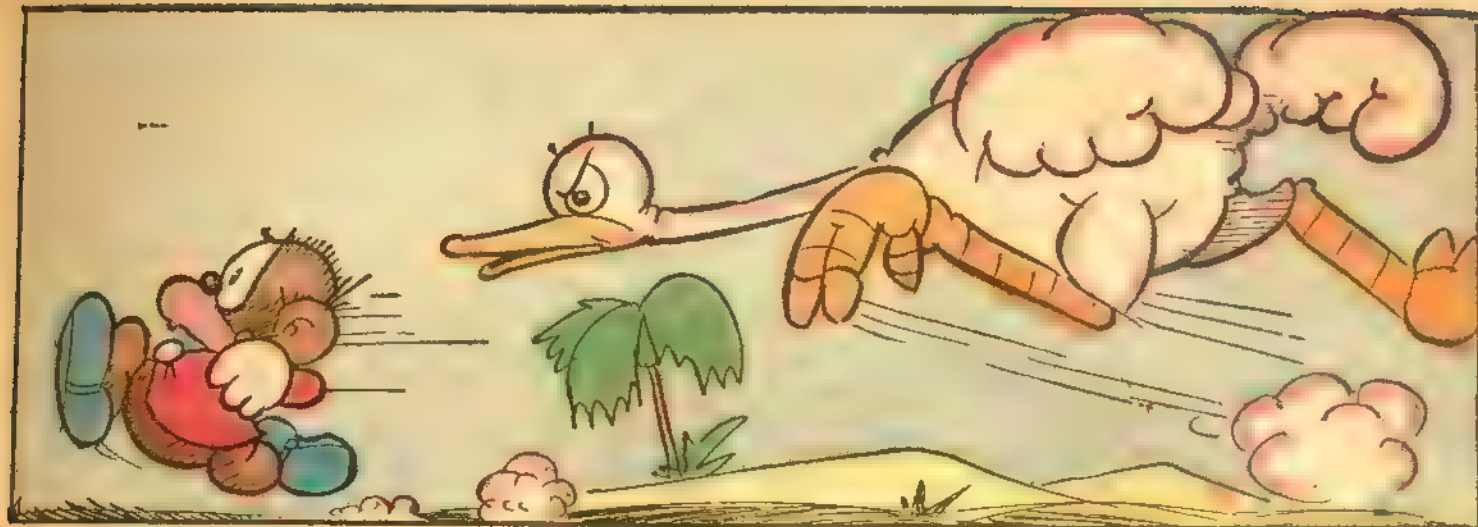

"I guess you'll listen more carefully after this, Felix," Perky said.

"Well, the trees look very nice there anyway. Come on inside, I have a bowl of cream for you, Felix, and a bone for Perky."

TIPPIE and CAP STUBBS FREE

Here's the exciting story of a playful little dog, called Tippiie, and Cap, a mischievous little boy, who have become inseparable friends. All the trouble began when they tried to keep Tippiie from accompanying Cap and his granny on a visit to Aunt Emmy. But Tippiie caught up with them and boarded the train just as it was pulling out. Cap was overjoyed to see Tippiie, but the passengers weren't. The real fireworks began when they reached Aunt Emmy's. Uncle Jeff had to put Tippiie in the doghouse for doing so much mischief. He wrecked Uncle Jeff's petunia bed, buried his pouch, and smashed Aunt Emmy's most precious lamp. But in the end Tippiie redeemed himself when, with the help of Cap, he saved Uncle Jeff from false arrest, jail, and disgrace. Read how Tippiie became a hero. A heart-warming story with plenty of thrills and laughs.
